By Marlon Ramos in Manila and Allan Nawal, Inquirer Mindanao

THE TOP US DIPLOMAT in the country yesterday urged the Philippines to swiftly "bring to justice" those behind the murder of a key witness to the Maguindanao massacre, even as the Inquirer obtained information that the witness had actually been in the custody of Moro rebels for weeks before he was killed.

While investigators puzzled over who the assassin was, the Department of Justice and private prosecutors wrangled over who was to blame for the death of Suwaib Upham, a militiaman who had pointed to members of the Ampatuan family as responsible for last November's slaughter of 57 people in Maguindanao. (See related story on Page A2.5.)

"I deplore the murder of Mr. Suwaib Upham, who bravely came forward to testify about the tragic Maguindanao massacre," US Ambassador Harry K. Thomas Jr. said in a statement. "I urge the Philippine authorities to conduct a swift investigation into his death and bring

THE WAY DEFEATED PRESidential candidate Joseph Estrada sees it, his running mate and now Vice President-elect Jejomar Binay should accept the offer to lead an anticorruption commission.

The former President said that Binay should not be an "NPA, a nonperforming asset."

Estrada said that as chair of the commission, Binay could go after not just President Macapagal-Arroyo but also other officials suspected of corruption and, in the process, help President-elect Benigno "Noynoy" Aquino III.

Luistro to review DepEd sex ed program

By Philip C. Tubeza

THE DE LA SALLE BROTHER who is President-elect Benigno Aquino III's choice for education secretary intends to review the controversial sex education program of the Department of Education when he takes over next week.

But Br. Armin Luistro FSC, the chancellor and president of De La Salle University (DLSU), said he has yet to decide what to do about the DepEd program that has been exercising the minds of his fellow religious and the influential Catholic Church.

Luistro said he was also waiting for his "marching orders" from Aquino who chose Luistro, 48, to head the DepEd, the second Lasallian brother to do so in 32 years. (The late Br. Andrew Gonzalez served as education secretary in the aborted presidency of deposed President Joseph Estrada from 1998 to 2001.)

"There are programs that need to be reviewed like sex education, which is becoming a big issue," Luistro told reporters at the Manila Hotel yesterday.

PRESIDENT-ELECT BENIGNO "Noynoy" Aquino III promises to be more friendly and transparent to the press, but expects a "honeymoon period," too. Which should last for six years, his spokesperson Edwin Lacierda said in jest.

After he assumes the presidency, Aquino will hold a press conference once a week, on top of briefings provided over by his spokespersons, according to Lacierda.

"That is his promise," Lacierda told reporters during a surprise visit at Malacañang yesterday afternoon. "We promised transparency, accountability. We will try our best to deliver that promise."

This should not come as a surprise since Aquino had been very accessible to the reporters during the 90-day presidential

JOURNALISTS' SHIELD

Gun permits, security assured

By Marcy C. Carvajal

JOURNALISTS UNDER THREAT can be issued permits to carry firearms and, at the same time, be provided with security, as part of a police preventive program to stem the rising number of murders committed against members of the profession.

"Journalists found to be in clear and present danger in the line of duty are encouraged to buy arms, and if he has one, he will be issued the necessary permit to carry the weapon," Supt. Constante Agpaoa, chief of Quezon City Police District's District Police Community Relations told Inquirer.

At the same time, he also urged media men to immediately report threats against them for immediate action.

Agpaoa added that complaints of threats against media men are top priority, and that police personnel will be deployed immediately as soon as they are told about it.

On June 22 the National Capital Region Police Office (NCRPO) issued a directive ordering the police district to engage in a dialogue with journalists and discuss preventive measures.

Agpaoa added that the directive arose from concerns on the recent killings involving radiomen Desiderio "Jessie" Dean Camangyan in Davao Oriental and Joselito Agustin in Ilocos Norte.

Land of 'Female Eunuch' welcomes first woman PM

By Madeleine Coorey

AUSTRALIA'S new Prime Minister Julia Gillard AFP/AP

SYDNEY—AUSTRALIAN women welcomed their first woman prime minister this week, but warned that the unmarried, childless Julia Gillard could face a gender backlash in a land known for its macho culture.

Forty years after Australia's Germaine Greer penned "The Female Eunuch" which unpicked the traditional role of women, Gillard was appointed on Thursday in an historic moment seen as the realization of a feminist fantasy.

The fact that Gillard was sworn in by another woman—Gov. Gen. Quentin Bryce, the first woman to hold the post as Queen Elizabeth II's representative in the country, appeared the icing on the cake.

"It's precisely what our mothers—and Germaine!—hoped would one day happen, as they argued, throughout the 1960s and 1970s, for fundamental changes to the fabric of the nation," The Australian's Caroline Overington wrote.

"Imagine that, 30 years ago: an unmarried woman, living in sin with a man. Who is a hairdresser. And aspiring to high office. Forget about it. That's how far we've come."

The change, which brings Welsh-born Gillard, 48, to the top job will shake up the land of "cold beer and unreconstructed misogyny," according to expatriate writer Kathy Lette.

"Let me say Australian men are quaking in their Ugg boots because even though we're one of the first countries in the world to give women the vote, it's a very sexist country," she told Britain's Sky News.

Veteran feminist campaigner Eva Cox said she delighted in the moment, but acknowledged that the brutal cut and thrust of Australian politics was "still very much a boyhood."

"It feels nice seeing all these women doing things. It was lovely seeing her and the governor general yesterday," Cox told AFP of Gillard.

"But is it the revolution? No. Have we cracked the glass ceiling? No. Will it change the culture? No, unfortunately."

With Gillard's Labor Party flailing in the polls against a conservative opposition led by macho man Tony Abbott, Cox said women were sometimes appointed to lead parties because they were "good at cleaning up messes."

Such is the case with New South Wales Premier Kristina Keneally, who heads the Labor Party in the country's most populous state and is known for her telegenic [illegible] as much as her government's [illegible] and [illegible] failings.

Keneally may have some support from state Gov. Marie Bashir, who is also the first female in that position, who has said she will not remove the premier unless there was a successful no confidence motion.

"It's never easy being a pioneer," said the only other woman currently leading a state, Queensland Premier Anna Bligh, adding that Gillard will face intense scrutiny in the role.

From her flaming red hair to her blunt delivery, Gillard will be under the spotlight as perhaps only one other female Australian politician has been before her—anti-immigration firebrand Pauline Hanson.

Gillard's ever-changing hairstyles, her live-in partner of four years, hairdresser Tim Mathieson and her childless status have already provided rich fodder for discussion.

In 2007, she was forced to respond to comments from a conservative politician that she was "deliberately barren" and therefore unable to connect with average Australian mums and dads.

"We don't have a good record of being nice to female politicians," Cox said.

Australia was among the first countries to give women the right to vote in national elections—in 1902—but the number of women in politics, or senior corporate positions, has lagged since then and men still outnumber.

"We've slid right down to 34th in the world in terms of representation of women in our national parliament. We're ranked equally with Afghanistan on that," Australian National University academic professor Marian Sawer said.

Gillard's ascension was not a sign that gender was irrelevant, "but it is an important signal to women that girls can do anything." AFP

Beer-swilling hairdresser is Australia's 'First Bloke'

SYDNEY—AUSTRALIA on Friday welcomed its inaugural "First Bloke," beer-drinking hairdresser Tim Mathieson, who has been catapulted into the public eye through his relationship with new Prime Minister Julia Gillard.

Mathieson featured prominently in media coverage of Gillard's astonishing unseating of tearful ex-leader Kevin Rudd after he joined the new prime minister for her swearing-in ceremony in Canberra.

"A proud day for our First Bloke," headlined Sydney's Daily Telegraph, with a picture of Mathieson offering Gillard a congratulatory peck.

"He is a hair stylist by profession, loves a beer with the same mates he has had since he was 15 and specializes in cooking Julia Gillard's favorite Friday night dinner, lamb roasts," the Telegraph said.

MATHIESON AFP

Mathieson, 53-year-old partner of Australia's first woman, and first unmarried, prime minister, suddenly became one of Google Australia's top searches on Thursday along with "julia gillard partner," "is julia gillard married" and "julia gillard boyfriend."

National news agency AAP tracked down former colleague Grace Romanin, manager of Melbourne's Heading Out salon where Mathieson's love for Gillard blossomed under the heat lamps.

"That's how they met, in here," she said. "He was a very bubbly guy, he did styling—cutting and blow drying.

"I'm just so glad that the chase happened outside of politics. He's such a great guy and I know he will make her very happy."

Mathieson, who has since switched careers to real estate, admitted "great surprise" at Gillard's rapid rise to office, just a day after she had been Rudd's deputy with no succession in sight.

"She will absolutely be a fantastic prime minister," he told Melbourne's Herald Sun. "She has the right mind set and she's very consultative. I am so proud to be her partner and to be able to support her today."

Last week's Sunday Telegraph reported that Mathieson has a child from a past relationship and was once involved in a drink-driving incident.

Mathieson also plays an important role in a key issue that dominates Australian public life: Gillard's hair.

Days before her shock rise to power, the then deputy PM's auburn locks appeared several shades darker in a deep, presidential red, a possible clue to the events that were to follow.

Mathieson said he was often up before dawn preparing Gillard's hair. AFP

Accused Jamaican drug lord arrives in US to face charges

NEW YORK—Accused Kingston drug lord Christopher "Dudus" Coke arrived on Thursday in New York to face drug and gun-trafficking charges following his extradition from Jamaica, US authorities said.

Coke "arrived this evening in the Southern District of New York to face charges of conspiracy to distribute marijuana and cocaine and conspiracy to illegally traffic in firearms," the US Justice Department said in a statement.

COKE AP

"Coke is expected to be arraigned in Manhattan federal court tomorrow (Friday)," the statement added.

The alleged drug lord's bid to evade capture last month led to the deaths of 73 civilians in a bloody offensive on his west Kingston stronghold, but he was finally turned over to US marshals earlier Thursday at Kingston's Norman Manley International Airport and escorted on the flight to New York.

Earlier, he had signed documents waiving his right to an extradition trial at a 15-minute hearing, Jamaica's Ministry of National Security said in a statement.

"Everyone, the whole country, has been adversely affected by the process that has surrounded my extradition and I hope that my action today will go some way toward healing all who have suffered and will be of benefit to the community of Tivoli Gardens," Coke said in a statement.

A raid by police and troops on Tivoli Gardens last month to capture Coke, a Robin Hood figure with deep support in the ramshackle slums of west Kingston, ended in the deaths of 73 civilians.

Despite a state of emergency, house-to-house searches and a bloody shoot-out between security forces and armed Coke supporters, Coke managed to evade capture until Tuesday, amid rumors that he was either being sheltered on the island or had fled.

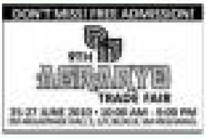

He had shaved his beard and was wearing a wig when he was picked up by police, who saw through the disguise.

Prime Minister Bruce Golding ordered Coke's arrest on May 17 after months of hesitation following a US indictment on charges that his "Shower Posse" Coke heads is supplying much of the cocaine on the streets of eastern US cities.

Coke said he was acting in what he considered "the best interest of my family, the community of western Kingston and in particular the people of Tivoli Gardens and above all Jamaica." AFP

DUMPLINGS INVADE FILIPINO TASTE BUDS

Siu Mai or Siomai?

By Marlon D. Salazar

Filipinos developed this craving for dumplings and the most popular so far is siu mai or more locally known as siomai. Dumplings stalls are noticeably increasing. They are in malls, supermarkets, and even in street corners. These dumplings have also evolved from being a side dish to becoming rice partners at very affordable prices.

Lautner to Pattinson: 'I'm hotter than you'

DAY IN HOLLYWOOD

Ruben V. Nepales

LOS ANGELES— "That's in the book—all of that stuff, even the line where Jacob says, 'I am hotter than you,'" Taylor Lautner said with a killer smile when asked about a line that his Jacob Black character delivers while he is shirtless to Robert Pattinson's Edward Cullen in "The Twilight Saga: Eclipse." "I love that line," he added.

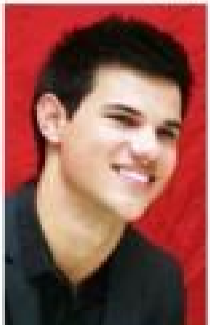

For someone who wasn't feeling well, Taylor certainly knew how to conceal it during a recent interview. Wearing a dark suit that complemented his dark, good looks, Taylor showed no trace that he wasn't feeling well. He was extremely poised and mature-sounding for his age—he's only 18.

Exhibit fetes Pinoy war heroes

By Romy Limeric

TRUE-TO-LIFE STORIES ABOUT World War II veterans have inspired films like Clint Eastwood's "Flags of Our Fathers," "Letters From Iwo Jima," as well as John Dahl's "The Great Raid." Unfortunately, relevant movies like these are few and far between.

Our war veterans' stories are brought back to scorching life in "War of Our Fathers…A Tribute to Filipino Freedom Fighters," a unique photo exhibit depicting the horrors of war.

It features vintage photographs, artifacts and memorabilia, and aims to share the moving but little-known tales of our war heroes, so that today's generation can arrive at a better appreciation of their sacrifices.

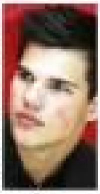

Philippine Veterans Bank president Ricardo Ballesteros Jr. says that, through the exhibit, the bank hopes, on our country's World War II heroes to help inculcate into the minds of young Filipinos the importance of their struggles and triumphs.

"Now more than ever, we need the kind of heroism and courage displayed by our forefathers during the war."

you feel it. We all have something different. Only around certain people and in a certain time and moment, that side comes out. I'd say that's probably the closest I have something in common with the wolf."

LAUTNER: "Nothing comes without hard work."

On what he looks for in a girl, Taylor, who dated singer Taylor Swift, rattled them off: "Loyalty and honesty, somebody who can just have fun and be herself. Somebody I can laugh with. Of course, you'd want them to be attractive, but what's inside is definitely more important than what's on the outside."

He sounded refreshingly upbeat about his life that now includes a retinue of photographers. "It changes a lot, because it's not normal for anyone to wake up in the morning and have 15 paparazzi men waiting for you, and who are going to follow you the whole day. The pros that come with the job highly outweigh the cons, so I'm definitely willing to take that negative side, which is very little."

Virtues

Taylor, who won junior world championships in martial arts as a kid, extolled the virtues of athleticism. "All the sports I did when I was growing up helped me a lot," he explained. "Martial arts taught me discipline. Sports teach you hard work. I believe that nothing comes without hard work. You won't go to bed and wake up one morning and, all of a sudden, you've achieved what you wanted. Sports make me competitive, so I'm thankful I was involved in sports."

He admitted, "I miss playing football, the games on weekends and traveling the world for martial arts competitions and that whole family. Those were some fun times."

"It's stuff that I've never really been exposed to," Taylor replied when quizzed about his comment on Oprah Winfrey's show that he neither drinks nor smokes. "It's a matter of surrounding yourself with the right people. My parents raised me well."

Horror flick

Before he shoots the final "Twilight" movies—"Breaking Dawn," parts 1 and 2—and the horror flick, "The Banshee Chronicles," with "Glee's" Lea Michele, Taylor will report first to the set of "Abduction."

"We start filming in July in Pittsburgh," he disclosed. "It'll be directed by John Singleton. It's about a high school senior who finds a picture of himself on a Missing Persons website. He finds out that his whole life has been a lie. So, in the rest of the movie, he's on the run while he's trying to find his true identity as well as his parents. It's an action-thriller with an exciting story line."

SM City North EDSA honors the fabulous Filipina

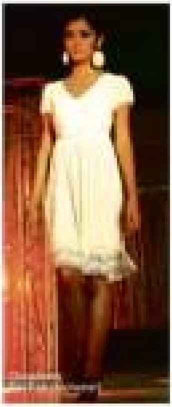

A different kind of Independence Day celebration went on at SM City North EDSA last June 12, 2010. The Block became the destination for stunning local beauties in equally striking clothing as it hosted Fab Pinoy, a fashion show honoring the Filipina.

Classic styles were presented with a modern twist, each ensemble especially crafted to bring out the beauty of the Filipina. Designers showcased their skill in creating outfits that would have a special place in hearts, and closets, the world over.

Clothes from Levi's, SO! Fab, Mossimo, Folded & Hung, Kamiseta and SM Department Store's very own in-house labels were included in the show. VNC and Celine provided the fashionable footwear, and Vivere Salon got the models all glammed up. Other participating brands included Okaayan, Runway, Kultura and Occasions.

SM City North EDSA recognizes the Filipina's potential to compete in the global fashion scene, and through Fab Pinoy it was able to invite people to share in this discovery. Introducing Philippine couture to the rest of the world has never been this fabulous.
